It lies between the River Avon, part of the Wessex Water System, to the west, and the village of Thornton to the east. Geography The village lies in the borough of Salisbury. Within the boundaries of the village is the smaller settlement of Portden, which lies to the southeast of the village. On the western edge of the village is the A338 road, the former Great Western and Great Central Joint Railway line. Port Valley is bounded by the flat, undulating landscape of the Cotswold Hills on the north and west, and is largely bounded by narrow fields of arable or grassy land. There are several small brooks flowing through the village, and the village sits in a valley which feeds the Avon River to the east of the village.
